

Aspen Environmental handed leadership award

NICE GOING—Dr. Hamid Rastegar, president of Aspen Environmental Group, right, receives a commendation from Dan Kuperberg, Agoura Hills City Council member.

Aspen Environmental Group of Agoura Hills was honored recently by state Sen. Fran Pavley and Mayor Harry Schwarz for its leadership in environmental sustainability.

The company helps public agencies assess the environmental consequences of energy and infrastructure projects.

Celebrating its 20th anniversary, Aspen opened new headquarters on Chesebro Road. The building is a candidate to be certified as a the first Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design building in Agoura Hills. LEED is an internationally recognized green building certification system that requires the implementation of practical and measurable green building design, construction, operation and maintenance solutions.

Pavley delivered an Environmental Sustainability Award from the California Senate recognizing Aspen's gold candidate LEED office building and its two decades as a leading environmental consulting corporation.

The company operates six other offices, including in San Francisco and Sacramento.
